A POINT OF HONOR.

There was a commotion in Scratch Gravel, Wy., on the morning of June 28, 1875. Jack Langworthy, a local celebrity, had killed a tenderfoot from Pennsylvania, and there was naturally some curiosity, if not to say excitement, over the

The circumstances of the case were like this:

Jack and the Pennsylvanian were having a little game of cards when the former noticed a slight deception on the part of his adversary in the way of dealing himself from one to four cards too many and concealing them in his coat sleeve. "Sich proceedings are entirely foreign to the customs of this yere camp,' remarked Langworthy and at the same time sent a bullet into the "tenderfoot's"

The rude law of Scratch Gravel took cognizance of this fact, and Jack was arrested. A few weeks later he was arraigned for the murder and pleaded guilty. The judge sentenced him to be hanged. Then Jack made a speech. He said:

"I killed the man, I know, and perhaps it's fair enough that I should die too. Leastways I don't set up my judgment agin that of the court. The laws of Scratch Gravel should be enforced, but just now I'm sort o' sorry the enforcement is nec-essary. The deal is a hard one, and the worst of it all is that the roughness is not agin me alone-oh, no, not agin me, but Sally and the twins. "I don't care for myself—just as soon go as not—but when I think of the twins I tell you I can't stand it. You see, the twins are boys—both boys—they are a rattling pair, and no mistake. I allers reckoned on the twins 'mounting to something in the world, but if their father is to be hanged-that settles it. What would the twins ever 'mount to then? "Now, if I could go some other way, it wouldn't look so bad—the twins might pull through-but to be strung up like a common thief, it would be a weight on 'em 'ere twins that 'ud keep 'em down forever. So you see, it ain't for myself that I care, not for me and not for Sally so much either, although I do kinder like the old gal, but the twins. Well, it breaks me all up to think of leaving them, it does, for a certain fact. Jedge, when will the performance take place?" The unfortunate man was informed that the 10th of July was the date fixed for his execution, and that he should make preparations to be on hand at that time punctually so as not to delay the proceedings.

"You see, Jack," said the judge famillarly, "we ain't going to be mean enough to lock you up, not you-it wouldn't be right-not with an honorable man like you. It ain't for any dislike for you or bad feeling that we're going to hang you, Jack, but it's the law, you know, the law. So you'll make it a point of honor, Jack, to be on hand when the time comes. For the next week Jack staid at home pretty much all the time. Occasionally some of his friends would drop in to ask about his health and the health of the twins. The slightest mention of the latter would set his tongue in motion, and somebow he seemed to think there were no other children in the world worth talking about "They'll pull way ahead of their old dad in a few years," he had often said. "Maybe one of 'em'll be an auctioneer or a bank president and the other a steambeat captain-who knows? Them boys are smart." One evening, just a week prior to the date fixed for his execution, he seated himself on a bowlder near his cabin door and took the twins in his arms. They were little fellows and climbed all over him. One of them got his little brown arm around the paternal neck and pulled the grizzly beard with his chubby fingers. Then, looking into the upturned face, he

"There's wasser in your eyes, dad. What'yr matter?" Jack put the child down rather roughly, and remarking, as he brushed his eyes, that "it were mighty hot that evening" he walked into the house.

The 10th of July arrived. In the morning, quite early, Bill Drake, an old time

said sorrowfully:

friend of Jack, came to see him. "Seems to me thar ought to be some way to get out of this," remarked Bill. "You wouldn't slip away, would you?" "I don't want to shoot you, Bill," he said fiercely, "but I'll do it, sure, if ye repeat that insult. Thought ye knew me better than that. I'm ashamed of yel" "But ye don't understand me!" exclaimed Bill excitedly. "Listent Th-jedge sentenced ye to be hanged the 10th of July, but he forgot to name the year! The 10th of July ten years from now will do, or longer. He only said the 10th of July!" "But he meant today," said Jack, trembling in every limb.

"But he didn't say it. Yer may suit yer own convenience about the year, Jack. Fer yer own sake, and fer the sake of the twins, skip!" There was much disappointment that afternoon among the citizens of Scratch Gravel when it was discovered that Jack was gone. Search was made of his cabin, but there were no signs of Sally, Jack or the twins. They were gone for good. And now comes the strangest part of the story. The 10th of July five years later a gray old man, bent nearly double, thrust his shadowy form into the presence of the chief magistrate of Scratch Gravel and demanded a hearing. "I am Jack Langworthy," he said, "and I have come back, according to my promise, to be hanged. You see, the twins are dead—both dead—and Sally, she's gone to -run away with another man, and now I've come back to meet the requirements of the law. There has been some delay, I'll admit, but I was bound to come back some time, and here I am " The laws and customs of Scratch Gravel had changed somewhat since Jack departed the place five years before, and as the affair in which he was interested was no longer a sensation of the day he was simply told to leave the town as soon as possible. He went at once, and when last seen alive he was tramping slowly out of town, with his face toward the setting

A little later in the year, when the bushes began to shed their leaves and the vines that tumbled over the gray rocks were touched with frost, the fleshless frame of a man was found suspended from a rock over a deep ravine. It was Jack Langworthy. Failing to find an executioner when he wanted one, he had taken the matter into his own hand and hanged himself.-Exchange.
